The President's Attitude.

Concerns, The Markets, etc.

The issuance and control of the mon ev of a country is the prerogative of sovereignty. Intelligent publicists do not disagree on this point. It is conceded on all sides that whoever controls money occupies the throne and exercises the royal prerogative.

The taxing power and the control of the currency are different forms of the same power. If a class can cause the levy of taxes for its benefit, it is king.

If it can control the currency, it is king. Under the Wilson bill as it was shaped by Messrs. Cleveland and Carlisle and originally reported before any amendment whatever was made to it, it levied protective taxes much higher than were levied by the Morrill war tariff Democrats have always de nounced. It did this because Mr. Cleveland wished it done-because in the last National Democratic Convention, through his personal representatives, Messrs. Whitney and Vilas, he caused the "revenues only" declaration to be stricken from the platform and to be substituted for it the protectionist straddle which the convention repudiated. Seeming to yield to the will of the convention, Mr. Cleveland merely dissembled and as soon as he was safe in the White House he returned to his original attitude-as he did on the currency question also.

When he forced the currency issue by declaring the country in imminent danger from the liability of silver to circulate-for that is virtually what he did declare-the purpose of the men controlling him was to prevent a thorough reform of the Democratic party by dividing it and to secure control of the currency on a double standard of a very little gold and a great deal of corporation paper-the latter representing nothing in the world but debt and inflation.

As far as Mr. Cleveland knows anything about the currency question, he believes in the double standard of gold and paper-of circulating corporation debt floated three to one against goldthat is with every gold dollar inflated by three pieces of silk paper, each one hundred cents less than nothing.

But it is not possible to believe that Mr. Cleveland was cognizant of the scope of the plans of the men controlling him. His mind is too narrow and als information too limited to get at governing and central truths of any

Wear Murder Case.

Special to Globe Democrat.

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., May 6 .- Judge Hotel Horror, Dun's Commercial Re- Gantt, of the Supreme Court, to-day issued a writ of prohibition to restrain Seventh Page-The Dancing Mas- Judge Wear, of the Butler County Cirter, Agricultural Hints, Domestic cuit Court, and Special Judge G. A. Standard from interfering with the case of the State against Charles E. Wear. This is a most remarkable case. Charles E. Wear is the son of Judge Wear. In 1891 he shot and killed Charles Lail, at Poplar Bluff, and was indicted for murder in the first degree. The usual delays afforded by the criminal law were resorted to. At last, after many continuances the case was dismissed in the Dunklin County Circuit Court by Special Judge Malden, a few months ago.

> Last February the Butler County Grand Jury reindicted Wear, and ther followed a procedure on the part of the young man's father, as Judge of the Circuit Court, that is unprecendented in the history of Missouri criminal urisprudence. The term of court was not adjourned until last Saturday, and no capias was issued for young Wear's arrest, although indicted for murder in the first degree. Under the statutes the Circuit Clerk can not issue a capias on his own motion during court time On the 8th of April Wear issued an or ler of record calling in Judge H. M Riley, of the Twenty eighth (New Madrid County) Circuit, to try the case. Last Saturday Judge Riley was present and ready to take up the case, but Judge Wear would not vacate the bench. Assistant Attorney General Morton Jourdon was also present direction of Gov. Stone to aid in th prosecution. Judge Wear put in most of the time until 4 o'clock reading newspapers, at which time Judge Ri ey notified him of his presence and readiness to make up the case. Judge Wear replied that he would run his own court to suit himself, and ordered unwarranted action. The Sheriff. however, adjourned court. To-day Judge Wear appointed G A Standard Special Judge to try the case and the Attorney General decided to invoke higher authority in order that banc May 21. Gov. Stone has been made aware of the facts in the case. and it is believed he will convey the same to the Legislature with authority to institute impeachment preceeding against Judge Wear. Public sentiment where the facts surrounding the murder are known is in favor of punishing young Wear to the full extent of the law, as the killing is regarded as a cold-blooded murder. Since the murder young Wear attempted to kill another man and badly wounded him. That justice has been trifled with and even openly defied seems to be ap-

The platform adopted at Kansas City furnishes no reason why such a convention should not be held, but rather the contrary .- Post-

An Insolent Offer.

If it be true that General Solicitor Blodgett of the Wabash. General So icitor Cochram of the Missouri Pacific and General Solicitor Spencer of the Burlington have made a proposition to Gov. Stone to break the deadlock in the Legislature if he will send a message authorizing the passage of a general fellow-servant bill with insurance features, what does it mean? It means an admission by the railroads that they have the power to control legislation. It means that this one interest, created by the State, holds enough legislators at its beck and call to say what laws shall and shall not be passed. It is able to dictate to the Legislature the terms of the to battle and, like many other gallant legislation it shall adopt and to say to the Governor that he shall recommend certain measures or his recommendation will be disregarded. The railroads offer to treat with the representatives of the people as a sovereign power whose consent to laws must be gained. The offer is the acme of insolence.

room, that blazed in the open fire place, was a charm itself. With the polished brass fire-dogs (more for ornament than for use) it reminded one of olden times. And here Miss Lilian and her father would sit for hours. The scene of home and comfort and quietude was complete. Mrs. Lilian's household was orderly, and pursued the even tenor of its way, which had been followed for twenty-six years: in fact, ever since she was an infant, and a lovely young mother and strong manly father had sat in the room she

Miss Lilian made a pretty picture as she sat there in the sitting-room. She was a pronounced blonde, of good height, and with one of those well much talk of an early love on her part never met since all correspon was forbidden them by her parents, who loved their only child.

Time passed on, and the dear old father was taken very ill and died. This made the home very lonely and sad, but her charming young friends would often come to cheer her up and lighten her burden and pass off the lonely hours.

It was towards dark on the 30th of November and she sat alone by the bright glowing fire in the sitting-room, and let her thought carry her back to the days ten years gone by. She had been having company all the after-noon, but these happy, young, gay-hearted girls had all dropped away and left her alone, when there came a loud ring at the door-bell which startled her for a moment. Then, thinking it might be one of her late visitors returning, or a new one, the sitting-room door opened and Jane brought in a small parcel wrapped in tough brown wrapping paper. "It's a bundle, marm, just left by the express man; shall I bring it in here?" "Yes, Jane, and bring the scissors to cut the cord."

Miss Lilian examined the address. but could not make out from where it it came. She finally removed the cord and wrapping paper, and there lay before her a worn out and faded soldier's uniform with brass buttons, cap, and picture of the curly-headed young man, and a miniature representing a beautiful young girl, apparently about sixteen years of age. Miss Lilian held these things for a few moments in her hands. Then she folded them up slowly together, and rising, walked quietly out of the room and up stairs. The mystery was now before her. "Was he dead? Had he been sent out soldiers, met his death on the battlefield?" When unexpectedly there came a knock at her bed-room door. to call her to tea. Miss Lilian answered that she was ill and desired not to be disturbed until morning.

Early that evening the winds began to blow higher and higher, and more and more drearily about the old stone house, and rattled the windows and banged the blinds of the flaring brick houses in the reighborhood, and on which involves a surrender of all for on the trees, and was banked up in the morrow the snow lay heavily upwhich the Governor and the friends of drifts all about the stone house. On the stairs she which embraces the fellow-servant and was met by Jane, who said there was a gentleman in the sitting-room who insisted on seeing her; and so Miss Lilian, who, though in trouble herself, would willfully inconvenience no one. Moreover, the offer of the railroad entered the sitting room, and saw by solicitors, as outlined to the committee the window a tall young man with thick, curly hair, who turning and seeing her, sprang forward, grasped her by the hands, saying, "Lilian, I have returned to claim you as my own! There is nothing now to stand between you and me."

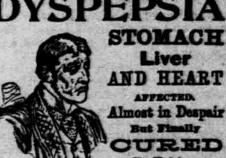

So Miss Lilian did change her name. But she never could quite forgive her soldier-husband for the shock and the dreadful grief she experienced when she discovered the contents of the par-
